Community helpers are a vital part of any local area. They help with everything from keeping us fed and watered, to supporting us when we aren't feeling so great. So what do the worksheets contain? What is a community helper? Community helpers are from a range of different jobs, and roles within the local economy. They include anyone that lives within the community that has a role which supports others within that community. Community helpers keep everyone healthy, happy and safe. From providing medical support and policing, to feeding or growing for those living locally. What are the community helpers worksheets like? This pack contains six worksheets and a cover page. It covers five community workers including: Baker, Doctor, Police Officer, Fireman, and Construction Workers. The final sheet in the pack invites children to think about others that help support the community they live in - helping them to think wider than the examples that we have provided here. Possible answers to other community workers might include: Nurses, Post office workers, Dustbin men and women, Teachers, Dentists, Chemists, and Farmers. We are sure that your kids will think of loads more as well. For each of the featured community helpers, there is a standard worksheet for the kids to fill out which includes: Information on what the role of the community helper is for kids to read, Picture of the helper, Tracing practise to reveal the name of the community helper, Game to pick some of the things (4) that the helper uses in their role. We have five of these for those mentioned already within this article. Would you like a closer look at some examples of these pages? We hope you like these worksheets. See you on the site again soon. Helen Back when Alfons Cornella was a university physics student, he composed the first mathematical text on relativity ever published in his native Catalan tongue. The book didn't go far-but it did inspire a lifelong quest that, decades later, would yield a company called Infonomia. "After I wrote the book, I understood that my mission would be to acquire ideas and diffuse them to society by any means," Cornella says. That's what his 10-year-old company does-tapping a network of more than 12,000 Spanish businesspeople and thinkers for ideas that fuel a Web site, magazine, conferences, and books. Infonomia began with Cornella's contact file: For three years, he did nothing but promote the notion of an innovation network among friends, colleagues, and, well, anyone who'd listen. By 2000, he was up to 5,000 members-enough to start a conference that brought together designers, techies, and execs of all stripes. Those conferences now attract 10,000 attendees a year. Cornella's Community of Innovators, mostly in Spain but increasingly in Latin America, also gather at Infonomia.com to share tips on how to implement their breakthrough ideas, such as a backpack that helps parents monitor their kids' exercise. His magazine, if ... distributed via the seatbacks of Vueling, a Spanish discount airline, is packed with interviews with well-known CEOs and designers. "Infonomia is an editor of ideas," Cornella says. "More exactly, we define ourselves as an 'edge space,' where people from smart businesses can get the ideas they should be aware of." Innovation, he believes, happens when ideas connect across unfamiliar disciplines. It works for Antonio Flores, president of Node Co., a consultancy and advertising agency in Barcelona. "It's impossible to stay ahead of the competition unless you know what it's doing," Flores says. "Infonomial shows you what the competition does and gives you ideas for how to do it better." Spain ranked 16th in innovation out of the 25 European Union member countries in 2005. Sweden topped the list. Source: European Commission Help kids learn about the different types of communities with our collection of free community worksheets. These communities worksheets cover the three basic types of communities: urban, suburban and rural. We have a nice variety to choose from that include activities like tracing the names of the different communities, answer some basic questions about the different types of communities, drawing pictures of the communities and more. Find More Teaching Resources Students list their street, town, county, state, country, continent, hemisphere, and even their home planet. Read this story and answer the questions that follow. In the story, Emily visits the city for the first time and discovers that it's much different than her home in rural Pennsylvania. (Approx.
